Boise, Idaho, June 20, 2012 - Crucial.com, a leading online retailer specializing in computer memory (DRAM) upgrades and solid state drives (SSD), was presented with the prestigious Silver Stevie® Award for Customer Service Department of the Year at a New York City gala hosted by The American Business Awards Monday night.

The American Business Awards are the nation's premier business awards program. All organizations operating in the U.S.A. are eligible to submit nominations - public and private, for-profit and non-profit, large and small. Crucial.com was selected as a finalist from a field of over 3,000 entries by a judging panel made up of more than 270 business leaders and executives from across the nation.

Director of E-commerce, Fred Waddel, was in New York City to accept the award on behalf of Crucial.com's global customer service department.

"We are honored that The American Business Awards has recognized the efforts of the Crucial.com global customer service department," said Waddel. "Crucial.com and its customer service team understand that not all customers will have the same understanding of technology and are often simply seeking a solution to a computer performance issue. It is the fabric of our company culture to not only take the time that is needed to provide each individual customer with the right information, but to also empower them with a better understanding of the technology. An educated consumer results in a loyal Crucial.com customer."
